baby, citing the effects of diet, drugs, medications, alcohol, smoking, and the mother's own emotions, i.e. "What's harmful for you is probably harmful for the baby." Part one ends with a gentle sequence on actual birth, showing reactions of the newborn, the rapid adjustment, and the need for closeness with the mother. Part two details the remarkable development of the newborn's senses, how each grows during the first weeks, and suggests ways for parental stimulation. It portrays patterns of newborn behavior, interaction with the parents, and the importance of closeness and secure love. Both parts are sensitive,
